

Short Description of Program:

What does “transition” look like, feel like, or entail? Sadly, failures in transition are common and share two identical root causes regardless of the type of pivot we discuss. Familiar transitions are from active-duty military to civilian life, first-responders released due to declines in physical ability, competitive athletes to post-career less or non-competitive pursuits, down-sized executives facing “chronic non-employability,” recently divorced, or empty nesters. Here’s one you might not identify with readily: Adult offspring out on their own for the first time. There are many other potential transitions, and we have training and responses that will allow an optimal approach to this challenging dynamic. This offering is the “power player” course that uplifts and accentuates what self-actualization becomes when someone faces a life-altering transitional pivot zone.
